The main goal of a descriptive essay is to describe an object, person, process, or event through writing. As an essay writer, you have to metaphorically show the reader instead of telling them. Now that you know the main goal of a descriptive essay, the next thing that should be focused upon is how to write one.

You might believe descriptive writing is extremely easy, considering its title. However, ask a set of professional essay writers, and they will let you know there are specifics to this genre of essay writing as well.

Even though you can opt for an essay writing service online as well to help you with the essay, here are some useful tips that will help you understand how you can compose a good descriptive essay without any help.

1. You are writing about one thing only, that is your topic, so choose a specific topic to write about. You should fully figure out the motive of the essay before you outline or write it. It is advised to encapsulate your main idea into the thesis statement. When writing the thesis statement, it is crucial to remember that the statement is more about directing towards the details that should make a superior impression in the reader's mind and less about your own point of view.
2. Your descriptive essay is at its peak if it is full of detail, so it's best to compile the details and be informative. You should add as many names, dates, and characteristics as you can. Remember that you have to show instead of telling the readers. There is no "too much detail" in a descriptive essay.
3. Your essay should be organized, so make sure you make an outline beforehand. Categorize your main points into different paragraphs, and that should lead you to make a subcategory of the main topic.
4. A good introductory paragraph can make your essay perfect so write an encapsulating introductory paragraph. They'll function as a great hook for the essay, with questions begging curiosity from the reader or a controversial statement. You should outline questions that you will aim to answer in the essay. At the end of the introduction, you can add the thesis statement. If you think writing is not your cup of tea then you can hire an assignment help service in this regard.
5. After the introduction, your next step is to write a body paragraph that should start with a topic sentence that secures the attention of the reader, and they know what to expect from the writing ahead. The body paragraph is the longest paragraph of the essay, so you can dissect the details in each body paragraph and make it expressive. Be as illustrative as you can without overwhelming the reader.
6. The conclusion is like the clasp of the essay, so make sure to summarize the essay in the concluding paragraph. You can write this in the way that you want to repeat the main ideas you mentioned in the first paragraph and most of the key features from the body paragraph. This paragraph is not where you introduce new ideas and discuss them; that is what you do with body paragraphs.
7. Before you regard your essay as completed, proofread it once or twice more and look for a way to revitalize your speech. There is always a chance to amplify a description, keeping in mind the rule of "you have to show instead of telling". The more you give them visual imagery through words, the more possible it is that all of the words and images will stay in the reader's mind for a long time, even after they have finished reading.
